

Key Takeaways from RX25 Talk

God Uses Unexpected People in Unexpected Ways

Just like digital tools reach unexpected audiences, God reaches people through the digital space—beyond traditional ministry boundaries.

The Church Must Embrace Digital to Fulfill Its Mission

COVID-19 showed us that church doesn't stop when buildings close. Digital platforms became sanctuaries—livestreams, websites, social, and data tools matter more than ever.

Digital Ministry Isn't Optional—It's Missional

Tools like Rock RMS aren't just technology; they're part of the mission. If we care about people, we must care about data, content, and accessibility.

We Are Called to Serve the 'Screen-Shaped Generation'

The next generation lives online. Our calling isn't to wait for them to come in person—it's to go to where they already are and meet them there with the Gospel.

AI and Emerging Tech Can Enhance, Not Replace, Ministry

Integrating new tools like AI isn't about replacing people—it's about enhancing connection, insight, and responsiveness.

From 'Platform' to 'Participation'

Ministry in the digital age is not just about broadcasting—it's about engagement. People aren't just viewers—they're participants, disciples, and data points God is already moving through.

If Jesus Used Parables, We Can Use Platforms

Jesus used the language and tools of his time to reach hearts. We should do the same—YouTube, TikTok, Instagram, ChatGPT. These are today's parables-in-motion.
